A DEED OF BLOOD.

Cruel Murder in the Woods Near Kingsbridge.

AWFUL STRUGGLE IN THE DARK.

The Perpetrators of the Crime at Large.

One of the most cold-blooded murders that has happened in New York or its vicinity for many months ame to light in a secluded grove at West Farms yesterday morning. Lying concealed in the densest part of Lydies' Woods, a lonely and desolate spot, removed from any habitation more than a mile, and seldom visited, except, perhaps, by boys or roaming trainps, situated off the Boston road, about half way between the Kingsbridge road and the bridge crossing the Bronx River, in the village of West Farms, was found, cold m death, the body of a Jewish pedier. Upon his head and face were twelve ghastly wounds, while across his throat, from ear to ear, was a gash or backed cut, made by some blunt instrument, probably a dull knife. When the body was discovered one arm was drawn up stiff, as if warding off a blow, and the other lay across the breast and one leg was bent. The murdered man ky that on his back, his feet toward the north. His ciothing was torn and bloody and presented the evidence of a FRARFUL STRUGGLE FOR LIFE. The spot on which the murdered man lay is sheltered from observation on either hand by bushes and undergrowth some three feet high, and to the right and left are towering cak and chestnut trees. On the whole, no better spot, for miles around, could be selected for the concealment of a body. Although not more than about profeset from the Boston road, the density of the foimge renders it more secluded than any portion of the

The discovery of the body was made by an aged negro named George Saxon, who, together with his daughter and son-in-law, occupies a little cabin about a mile from the woods. Saxon left his cabin shortly before six p'clock yesterday morning and proceeded to the woods, as is often his custom, to collect branches of trees and other debris for fuel.

In searching for this fuel he espied, about fifteen feet distant, through the undergrowth, the upraised arm of a man, which he at first supposed was a branch Going nearer, he was horrified by discerning the body of a man. A short distance from the body was a small black and tan which, on the approach of the negro, ran away. Saxon, without making a further investigation. hastened home, and told his daughter of what he had een. A few hours later his son-in-law and two fellowlaborers, named respectively Abraham Laudrane, James Campbell and William Begelspiller, who had been working in stables near by, came to the house for breakfast and to them the old man narrated the story of his discovery. After breakfast the party proceeded to the indicated by and, on the spot Saxon, found the corpse exactly as it had described. One of the men immediately started for the Thirty-fourth precinct station house, one and a half miles distant, and informed the police. Captain Bennett, with a couple of officers, immediately repaired to the spot. Upon seeing the body the Captain sent word to Coroner Miller, and also telegraphed to Inspector Thorne, in charge of the Third district. Those officials arriving, the body was removed to the Tremont ation house, and Inspector Thorne detailed a section of men to scour the neighborhood in search of the nurderers, as well as to find, if possible, a clew to them. He also telegraphed to several precincts for reinforce. ments of detectives. About fifty feet from where the A PEDLER'S BAG AND BASKET were discovered, cove ed with spots of blood and lying sear the stump of a tree. There was also found by Difficer Pinckney, on the road near the stone wall, about 100 feet from where the body was discovered, a small tinen checkered collar and a piece of black cloth, about four inches square, into which a number of needles were sticking. Some crumbs of bread were close to collar. In another part of the is, about twenty feet from the ag and basket, was picked up a leaf from a Hebrew calendar. soods, about twenty feet from the bag and basket, was picked up a leaf from a Hebrew calendar. These comprised all the clews either to the curdered man's identity or to that of the atrocious murderer that could be found by the police.

At the Thirty-fourth precinct station house Coroner Miller summoned a jury to view the body, and Doctors Liebman and Rodenstein made a post-mortem examination of the body, the result of which is as follows:—

of the body of the unknown man found in the Twenty-lourth ward in the woods, near Keller's icehouses. Rigor mortis was marked; right arm and hand lifted; hand closed; left forearm flexed. On inspection the bead, face and neck were found covered with various wounds, bruises and scratches. There was a scratch over anterior aspect of the neck, commencing below the right angle of the Jaw over the larynx, crossing the median line; a gapping wound, one and a half inches long, along the ramus of the right jaw; a smaller wound, one inch in length, below and back of the wound above described; a wound on left cheek, one and a quarter inches in length, running horizontal with the upper maxillary; upper syelida very much contused and colored a deep violet; poer the nose a ragged wound, one inch long; a ragged wound over superculsary ridge of right eye, contused; a wound vortical and parallel with median line, and three-quarters of an inch to right of it, with ragged and sontused edges, two and a half inches long, through which a fracture of the skull could be seen, and frontal bone protruding; on left of median line, another wound, one and a half inches in length, further to the left another wound two inches in length of the same nature as the others, and two wounds on the left particle to the left another wind, one and a half inches in length, further to the left another wound two inches in length of the same nature as the others, and two wounds on the left particle long; on the right side of the median line, on the vertex, there was a wound two inches in length

ses. It is dothing consisted of a black ribbed coat and vest, brownish pantaloons with a bite stripe, white knit shirt, and boots. The pockets of his pantaloons, which were tucked into his boots, had been turned inside out by his murderers. In the opinion of the Coroner, he had not been dead twenty-four hours. An examination of the bag and basies found near the body showed them to be about hair stocked with peddler's supplies, consisting of shirts, collars, table cloths, stockings, handkerchiefs and a general assertment of fancy goods. Several articles had prints of blood upon them, showing conclusively that they had been handled by those who did the bloody deed. The outside of the bag had a large spot of blood upon it, which would have been occasioned by the nead of the murdered man being pressed upon it after having been struck. In the basket was also found what may prove a clew to the wile murderer—namely, a check shirt, well worn and quite dirty, bespattered with blood. Its bosom was ripped upward in several places. The arms and back were intact, showing to obtain bonds he was placed in Luddow Street Jail; and there, as has been airvady said, he told his story to places. The arms and back were intact, showing to obtain bonds he was placed in Luddow Street Jail; and there, as has been airvady said, he told his story to ensure the body of the victum, who had, when found, both yest and coat on.

house, and the excitement grew intense. That the deed had been posts by Tranps all appeared to believe. Hundreds repaired to the spot in the woods where the body had been found, and a search was instituted in every direction for half a mile around to discover traces or ciews, but nothing further could be found. Theories were rife as to the manner in which the crime had been committed in the woods where the body was found, while others asserted that the publier must have net his death at the lands of robbers in some shanty in the country where he had put up for the night, and, after being pillered of whatever money he had about him, had been carried by his murderers to the woods and there secreted. To accruait what foundation the theories advanced possessed the reporter, accompanied by odicers of the precinct, went carefully over the entire ground. In their examination one fact was noticed. Around the spot where the body lay there was not the slightest evidence of a struggle. The brush and undergrowth were not disturbed in the least. Not a broken branch or bent bush could be found anywhere round, and had a struggle taken pince there, supple evidence of the same would be presented; neither was there a drop of blood to be found. The most platisible theory, therefore, seemed to be that the man had been.

who, suspecting him to have money in his possession, atruck him on the head with a hatchet or some similar weapon. The pedier showing fight, they showered blow after blow upon his head, while one of them with a blunt knife endeavored to cut his throat. After having killed him they rifled his pockets and plunged their hands through his stock of goods to see if he had any money concaded in it. During the struggle, it is thought, the shirt of one of the men (the garment found in the basket) became torn and bloody, and the munderer took it off, selected another from the pack in its place and put the bloody and torn one into the bag.

THE HIMSO OF THE MODY

became now the main object of consideration, as, if left on the road, passers by would discover it in the early morning. The woods near by presented itself as a safe place and thence the myrderers carried the dead body, together with the pack and basket. The collar and cloth with the needles in it, in all probability, dropped from the basket. The entire absence of blood in the suppassed place of murder is accounted for by the heavy rain which fell on Saturday night washing it away.

FORGERY AND MURDER.

REVELATIONS THROWING LIGHT ON A SERIES OF CRIMES-PARULSEI'S BEER STAMPS-THE MURDER OF TORRING AND THE WALL STREET BOND FORGERIES.

The arrest of Pakulski, the Prescott House burber, and the capture of over $4,000 worth of stelen or forged United States revenue stamps in his possession on Wednesday afternoon, have brought to the surface some extraordinary facts which the entire detective service of the country will do well to carefully study.

A gentleman connected with the press of this city had occasion to visit Ludlow Street Jail. He went there for the purpose of interviewing M. Garnier, who was incarcerated for debt. As the conversation ended M. Garnier said, "By the way, you should have a talk with the little Italian engraver, TOLLOMBO DE CHIEVETTA, who was brought to the prison the other day." The reporter acted upon the suggestion, and in a few minutes was listening to a revelation of thrilling interest. Tollomeo de Chievetta was a handsome young man, below the medium size, with large, lambent black eyes, high forehead, Grecian nose and modest demeasor. In reply to the reporter's questions he said he was twenty-six years of age, that he was born in Italy, but had learned the business of an engraver in Turkey. "The engravers of Constantinople," said he, "are the finest in the world, although they are very slow, and my work there was almost exclusively confined to ENGHAVING WATCHES.

An unpleasantness that arose from a love affair compelled me to leave the Sultan's dominions and I proceeded to Naples and commenced business. Trade was dull, and I therefore applied with anxious alacrity for an engagement as skilled engraver, which had been advertised in one of the Neapolitan papers. The advertiser was an Italian, a naturalized subject of the United States and a resident of New York. He gave his name as Signor de Vinci, and he said before employing me he would like to see some specimens of my work. I submitted some. He was perfectly satisfied and instructed me to engage a private office and hold myself in readiness to commence work. He furnished me plates and work to copy. He said the samples were American billheads, and that, in consequence of the high price of labor in America and the sequence of the high price of labor in America and the sequence of the high price of labor in America and the lack of really skilled operators, he had brought the work to Italy. I now know," said De Chievetta, with a nervous twitch of the mouth, "that the subjects given me to engrave were railroad bonds and five and ten dellar notes of United States currency. I thought the work was coarse and common, and I began and completed my work to Signor de Vinci's entire satisfaction. He paid me liberally, more than I had bargained for, and after frequent conversations with him I resolved to emigrate to the United States." With a letter of introduction from Signor de Vinci to Signor Pologniac-a barber under the Pacific Hotel on Signor Pologniac—a barber under the Pacific Hotel on Greenwich street—the young engraver arrived in New York in March, 1873. Pologniac received him with empresament and insisted that he should become his guest. The barber lived on Essex street and his wife was a fascinating woman of romantic proclivities. After he had been for a few days an inmate of Pologniac's cosey home Tollomee was introduced to another barber, Pakulski, whose place of business was under the Prescott House, Broadway. A day or two after Sionox Tolkrin.

another barber, was introduced to the young engraver, and the three men used to go out in the evening and enjoy themselves. Mine. Pologniac in the meantime began to admire the handsome engraver, and took no pains to conceal her liking for him. After a fortuight's acquaintance she impressively warned him to be careful of her husband and his two barber acquaintances, "They will surely get you into trouble," she said, "and for my sake, as well as your own, be very, very careful." Mine. Pologniac's sister was the wife of the barber Pakulski. The sisters were young and confiding. Both admired the engraver, and when together there is no doubt that he formed the topic of much of their conversation. They were both emphatic in the conviction that if he continued to keep the company of their respective husbands and Torrino he would assuredly be truined. So continued to keep the company of their respective hus-bands and Torrino he would assuredly be ruined. So earnest was Mme. Pakulski in the matter that she accused her husband of trying to compass the ruin of De Chievetta by inducing him to become

A PORORE.

Pakuiski acquainted his two tonsorial confreres with his wife's arraignment, and a scene at the house in Essex street was the consequence. One night, when Madame and the engraver were in the parlor together, Pulcentas came home in a tempestuous mood. His Essex street was the consequence. One night, when Madame and the engraver were in the parlor together, Pologniac came home in a tempestuous mood. His face was fivid and his eyes flashed like burning coals. His voice was tremions with suppressed rage and his fingers and facial muscles twached convolsively. With flendish oaths he denounced his wife, and then ordered her to leave the room "My wife is meane—an idlot—a fool," said he, after she was gone; "ahe has been telling you all soris of less. I will be divorced—I will put her in a lunanc asylum." Next morning Poogniac invited the young engraver to accompany him to New Jersey. The pair proceeded to Nannet, and there the barber engaged a carriage and drove his guest into the country. It was in the early April, and the roads were axis-deep with shush and mud. Some good-humored banter was exchanged between the men as they were bowled along.

Finally the carriage stopped at a small cottage standing alone on a bleak and bare situation. So complete was its isolation from other human habitations, that it might have been the home of a hermit. They entered without any premonitory knock and there saw Torrino in the Protean rôle of cook, housekeeper, and maid-of-all-work. After refreshments, the two barbers instructed the engraver as to his duties. He was to remain in the lonely cottage and do his own cooking while he executed plates for United States bonds and currency. Besides this he was requested to in Brooklyn. The murderer has never been discovered up to the present hour. The detectives arrested a man named Caromant, but as there was no evidence to convict him he was discharged. It was well known that Torrino was engaged in passing counterfeit bonds and currency, and that the 'queer' he operated in was perfect in execution and finish. The most accomplished experts have hitherto failed to discover where and by whom these extraordinary forgeries were executed, and the tacts are now, for the first time, made public. The capture of Wednesday last forms a suggestive sequel to this revelation. On the afternoon of that day, it will be remembered, Detective Schraidt was sitting in a liquor saloon on the corner of the Bowery and Hester street, when the barber Pakulski and a boy named Honry Myers entered. The boy carried a satched and the man unsuspectingly treated the detective to several drinks. By and by he grew confidential. "That's the very thing I want to do," was the propular regular. "In that satchet there is $4.350.

THE JERSEY SCHOOL SCANDAL. PREPARING THE CASE FOR THE GRAND JURY-THREATS OF VIOLENCE AGAINST ME. HOL-

The excitement in regard to the exposures of Mr-Hollins, of the Board of Education in Jersey City, is unabated. Letters are pouring in from all quarters of Hudson county thanking Mr. Hollins for the bold stand Hodison county thanking Mr. Hollins for the bold stand he has taken in the cause of reform, economy and good government. The evidence which he has prepared for presentation to the Grand Jury is of the most damaging character. According to the ruling of the Court of Over and Terminer in the Burnsted trial every member of the city boards whose vote is recorded in favor of the payment of a fraudulent claim is indictable. Mr. Hollins has been in close consultation with his legal adviser during the past few days. The Grand Jury will summon witnesses in the case to-day. The charges are twofold. The first relates to the payment of claims which were illegal and the expenditure of moneys witnout authority of the Board, and the second refers to the appointment of incompetent teachers, the retention of teachers complained of for incompetency and the favoritism extended by members of the Board to teachers who were reported as unfit for their positions.

After the meeting on Friday evening threats of violence were made against Mr. Hollins, which that gentleman treated with remarkable coolness and self-possession. The action of the Supreme Court in his lavor has completely turned the tables on the other members of the Board who were foolish enough to suppose they had the power to expel him. If the Board do not pass a resolution in favor of an investigation by a committee of citizens entirely independent of that body Mr. Hollins intends to offer such a resolution himself. An appointment of a committee by Mayor Tranhagen would give entire satisfaction. he has taken in the cause of reform, economy and good
